

Temporary Work: A Path to Opportunity

By Robert Half/Accountemps

Working as an interim employee can open doors for you, whether you're an experienced or up-and-coming payroll professional.

Recent college graduates can learn in-demand skills and earn real-world experience before pursuing full-time employment. Seasoned professionals can use this path to transition to retirement or re-enter the workforce after an absence. Others choose temporary roles to achieve a more flexible schedule or access to a diverse range of projects.

However, there are some common misconceptions that prevent some professionals from exploring temporary work opportunities. Here are three – and the realities behind them:

Misconception 1: Employers hire temporary workers for lower-skilled positions only.

Reality: The days when “temp” positions meant only clerical work are long gone. Some do still exist, of course, but today many employers also bring in interim staff for high-level consulting projects that require expertise not available internally. Some temporary financial employees may even assume leadership roles on certain initiatives.

Misconception 2: Temporary employees never really have a chance to fit in because everyone knows they won't be around for long.

Reality: First, you may be on assignment longer than you think. As for fitting in, most employers today recognize the importance of helping temporary personnel integrate well with full-time staff. Some provide something resembling a mini-onboarding process – from providing an appropriate workspace and informing candidates about company policies to introducing them to key employees.

Misconception 3: Working as a temporary employee won't lead to a full-time role.

Reality: Many organizations have long used interim hiring as a way to evaluate professionals for full-time roles. Most employers today also recognize that temporary work can be a valuable addition to a candidate's resume: In a recent Robert Half survey, 78 per cent of executives polled said they consider a long period of consistent temporary work comparable to full-time employment. Once you've had an opportunity to make valuable contributions to an employer, it may not be long before the company decides to make you a permanent fixture in their workplace.

Accountemps is the world's first and largest temporary staffing service specializing in the placement of accounting, finance and bookkeeping professionals. The company has more than 350 offices worldwide and offers online job search services at www.accountemps.com.