Quebecers faring the best in Canada when it comes to debt and retirement savings, but many still remain challenged financially

Canadian Payroll Association's 2017 Survey finds many Quebec employees still living pay cheque to pay cheque

MONTREAL (September 6, 2017) – Even though there have been some signs of economic improvement over the past year, most employed Canadians, and even those in Quebec, are no better off when it comes to their retirement prospects.

High Levels of Spending, Low Rates of Savings

According to the Canadian Payroll Association's ninth annual survey, released today, 47% of working Canadians report it would be difficult to meet their financial obligations if their pay cheque was delayed by even a single week. The numbers are even higher for millennials in their 30s (55% would have difficulty) and Gen Xs in their 40s (51%). In Quebec, 34% live pay cheque to pay cheque (the lowest number nationally).

The survey also shows that 41% of employees nationally, and 30% in Quebec, spend all of or more than their net pay. The number-one reason given for increased spending is higher living costs.

Forty-two per cent of survey respondents (and 39% in Quebec) said they save 5% or less of their earnings, below the 10% savings level generally recommended by financial planning experts.

Illustrating just how strapped some employees are, 22% (nearly 1 in 4) say they could not come up with just $2,000 within a month for an emergency expense. Seventeen percent of Quebec employees would struggle to come up with $2,000 (the lowest nationally).

High Debt Levels

While debt levels of working Canadians continue to remain high, just 20% of Quebecers feel overwhelmed by their debt level, less than the national average of 35%.

While nearly one-third (31%) of Canadian respondents say their debt load increased over the year, just one-quarter (24%) of Quebec employees have increased debt. Canada-wide, those who believe it will take more than 10 years to pay down their debt has risen to 42% (versus 36% in 2016). Fully 12% believe they will never be debt free.

As in past years, 94% of Canadians carry debt, with the most common debt being mortgages (28%), credit cards (17%), car loans (18%) and lines of credit (17%). Not surprisingly, given the high cost of real-estate in some areas, more respondents than ever find mortgages on principal residences the most difficult debt to pay down, with 32% of respondents selecting this option. For the first time in the survey's nine year history, mortgages surpassed credit card debt (23%) as the most difficult to pay down.

Results indicate that the primary reason for increased debt is higher overall spending. The major reasons for increased spending are higher living expenses (32%) and unexpected expenses (25%). Despite their precarious financial situation, 26% of working Canadians feel that earning more is their best way to financial well-being, versus just 19% who think spending less is the ticket to financial security.

"Even though Quebecers are better off on many fronts, it is still important to spend less and save more every day, for emergencies and for retirement," says Janice MacLellan, the Canadian Payroll Association's Vice-President of Operations. "The survey results also show that it is very difficult for people to change or reduce their spending patterns. By Paying Yourself First through automatic payroll deductions, you are diverting money into a retirement or savings account before you have the opportunity to think about spending it."

Retirement Delayed for Many

Compared to the national average of 24%, just 16% of Quebec employees (the lowest nationally) say that their savings have delayed them from setting a target retirement age. Quebecers, more than anywhere else, feel they will have to delay retirement because their investments are not performing as anticipated (18% vs. 13% nationally).

Almost half of working Canadians (46%) say they will now have to work longer than they planned five years ago, and the top reason cited is they are "not saving enough". This is corroborated by another result indicating that 74% of Canadians (and 73% of Quebecers) have saved only a quarter or less of what they feel they will need to retire. And even among Canadians closer to retirement (50 and older), a disturbing 47% are still less than a quarter of the way to their retirement savings goal.

The average Canadian's target retirement age is now about 61, and half (46%) think they will need a retirement nest-egg of at least $1 million. Quebecers have more modest retirement expectations, with just 30% feeling they will need more than $1 million to retire.

Economic Outlook

Canada-wide, there were a few positive indicators, most notably a 5% increase in the number of employees with total household incomes of over $125K, and a slight rise (2%) in full time employment to 89%.

However, most working Canadians see little to cheer about, with only 39% (32% in Quebec) expecting the economy in their city or town to improve. While the national average is up 3% over last year, it is down by 27% from the first survey done in 2009.

What to Do

With many Canadians challenged by debt, cost of living worries, and insufficient retirement savings, the Canadian Payroll Association recommends you Pay Yourself First by saving 10% of your net pay.

Canadian Payroll Association 2017 Survey of Employed Canadians

A total of 4,766 employees from across Canada, and from a wide range of industry sectors, responded to an online research survey between Monday, June 27th, 2017 and Friday, August 5th, 2017, using a convenience sampling methodology. The survey was developed by the Canadian Payroll Association and conducted by Framework Partners. The survey is consistent with a margin of error of plus or minus 1.3% 19 times out of 20, but as a non-probabilistic methodology was used, a definitive margin of error cannot be expressed.
